Breakfast at a Hotel.

BY CON C. QUENCE.

"If ye lament me I will stay."

Speak while Lhear, and while I long
To feel your love is true and strong.

While peace can soothe my troubled brow, Wait not to miss me; hold me now! Set not your kisses on my cheek "Rare, broiled sirioin."

for on my mouth, too cold to speak In life I long to feel their breath, But what are kisses worth to death ? Like blossoms dropped on ice and snow; Like songs when howling tempests blow, That might a power to bless, That might a life with joy endow; Oh! if you kiss me, kiss me now,

When I am lying pale and dead,

And pour your loss in deafened ears.

And wash my bredless face with tears. What thrill of hope or tenderness

Will beat beneath my burial dress?

Alas! I cannot rouse and say:

What look of gratitude arise
And lift the lide of sightless eyes?
What loving volce escape these lips.
From which no speech or language slips?

Remember not when I am gone The deeds I did or would of done, How much I loved, how vainly strove To find an answer in your love ; Say not with tears and cries and prayers : Would that we showed her tenderer cares, Had patience with the faults we knew, Clung to the heart so warm and true, That now we weep with hopeless pain And know will never come again. Ah! breathe not then with useless vow; But if you love me, love me now. For, standing round my wintry grave,

Too late to serve me or to save, Fling on it all you have to give "At last her follies we forgive !" A kind but slumbering thought of me, A memory of the vanished past, A hope of peace and love at last, A speechless prayer, a silent sense, That sometimes speaks in my defense, That says: "Our life is not too long, And we, perhaps, were sometimes wrong ; And listen to that pleading voice, And bid a living heart rejoice. If late remove or grief allow Forgiveness then, forgive me now
